Dear sirs,

It seems retrograde to me to build a national broadband network at 12mbps when there are existing networks in other countries with much higher rates.

I believe it should be a national priority to upgrade our broadband network to at least world best standard.

It can be expected that the system that is built now will be used for quite a long period of time. If we are going to build it then it should be built to a high standard that will last, rather than to a standard that everybody will want upgraded as soon as it is built.

Do a good job now please even if it is going to cost more!

Tours truly,

Jan Hood
