

From: Day, Troy
Sent: Wednesday, 19 March 2008 9:31 AM
To: National Broadband Network Taskforce
Subject: FTTN

Hi,

I think you should make it FTTH, choose someone other than Telstra, because Telstra will be a bad choice because we know they will not place fair pricing on the FTTN. ACCC will then have to take them to court, they'll go kicking and screaming, it will drag out and then they will find another way to make it hard for competitors. Then ACCC will have to take them to court again. A never ending cycle. You only have to learn from their past to see what kind of company they are like. Find a foreign company to do it, who has no investment in broadband in Australia at all, and get them to do FTTH for the whole country.